Devon – Does Burisma have any related company registered in the U.S.?
A subsidiary of any sort even? If you don't know then I'll ask Vadim in my next email.

Thank you Heather. That sounds appropriate and please communicate to Vadim the immediate moves.

Devon and Hunter – The immediate plan is to reach out to the Energy and Ukraine desks, respectively, at State Dept to introduce them to Burisma and “update” them on Burisma’s current situation, which will include the issues you’ve emailed me about today per Vadim’s emails to you. We can’t just go in there with a hard ask but it is often the case that the conversation is open to an ask, assuming it goes well. That will include outreach to Carlos Pascual, he is the top US energy diplomat; his actual title is Special Envoy and Coordinator for International Energy Affairs at State. He was formerly US Ambassador to Ukraine (’00-03) and later to Mexico (09-12 - he was apparently not so great in Mexico but still respected and highly effective). He was recently in Ukraine and on the Hill briefing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee privately about Ukraine and the challenges it faces.

Devon – This email from Vadim below has precipitated a conversation I wanted to have with you anyway. As part of our ongoing strategy, I would ideally like for BSF to engage a lobbyist of our choosing to work with me. We at BSF will lead all this work and can execute the political and legal work right up to the line where we would need to register as lobbyists, but I don't want to register under the lobbying disclosure act or the foreign agents registration act. I have the right person picked out and have already casually and broadly discussed the issues with him. If it's okay with you, I'll have a more pointed conversation with him today so we can get moving, starting with key State Dept officials we need to start talking to this week. (His name is David Leiter – he is good, trustworthy, understands energy issues and Ukraine, and he is very close with Sec. Kerry (was formerly Kerry's Chief of Staff, which is how I know him).)
